Health Education: Nia Teen and Nia Yetu

In Kenya, there is no formalized mandated reproductive health education curriculum to give girls the answers they seek about their changing bodies. We're working to change that by creating fun, aspirational transformative media to unlock a universe of support for girls.

Our referable health magazine, Nia Teen celebrates real girls, highlights their heroes, and includes an innovative comic that walks alongside girls as they go through the joys and challenges of growing up.

About:

We create innovative rights-based menstrual and reproductive health and rights education (MRHE) in the form of a referable health magazine called Nia Teen, designed for behavior change, and to improve the health and agency of adolescent girls living in the deepest pockets of economic and informational poverty, as well as Nia Yetu (or "Our Purpose") a corresponding 24-session facilitated health education curriculum adapted from the Adolescent Reproductive Health and Life Skills Curriculum, Tuko Pamoja.

Nia Teen magazine is a comprehensive health magazine created by ZanaAfrica for Kenyan girls. Rooted in our database of over 10,000 real questions collected from 1,000 girls through our programs, each issue is designed and tested for measurable knowledge retention and behavior change.

Our magazine provides the information, guidance and affirmation girls seek and need to navigate puberty in a way that is referable and user-tested for behavior change and health outcomes. They are a physical resource that girls own and can read in private, share with others and refer back to over time.

Topics include menstrual and reproductive health education through a rights-based lens, alongside activities, to foster self-efficacy, and to support girls to safely and confidently navigate adolescence and stay in school. An embedded comic within the magazine demonstrates healthy decision-making and has an accompanying discussion guide.

Nia Teen and Nia Yetu are designed for scalability at low cost and minimal reliance on facilitators, and will be piloted alongside sanitary pads as part of a randomized controlled trial in 2017 conducted by The Population Council, and funded by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

This study, called The Nia Project, will be the first study in Sub-Saharan Africa to rigorously measure the individual and combined effects of sanitary pads and reproductive health education on girls' educational, social, and health outcomes.

The results of this trial, which will be out in 2019, will be a seminal contribution to the global evidence base and will expand the definition of menstrual health to include sexual and reproductive health and rights.

Research: The Nia Project

ZanaAfrica, in collaboration with The Population Council, is testing approaches to determine whether access to sanitary pads and reproductive health education helps keep girls in school and improves social and health outcomes.

The Issue

For many adolescent girls around the world, puberty is a vulnerable time when they face various pressures and challenges-including sexual harassment, abuse, early marriage, and unintended pregnancy- which threaten their health and wellbeing. These challenges are amplified when girls lack the knowledge and tools they need to navigate puberty safely and with dignity.

In Kenya, girls drop out of school at a higher rate than boys beginning at puberty, and many do not have access to reliable reproductive health education as they enter adolescence. Access to menstrual hygiene products and sexual and reproductive health education is thought to help reduce school absence and improve health and social outcomes, however, little rigorous evidence exists to date.

The Progress

ZanaAfrica and The Population Council are conducting a randomized controlled trial to evaluate The Nia Project, a study involving more than 3,000 adolescent girls in 140 primary schools in Kilifi, Kenya, to determine whether providing girls with reproductive health education and menstrual hygiene products positively impacts their education and well-being.

Participating schools are assigned to receive one of four interventions:

" Arm 1: Schools receive disposable sanitary pads

" Arm 2: Schools receive reproductive health education

" Arm 3: Schools receive disposable sanitary pads plus reproductive health education

" Arm 4: Schools serve as the control arm of the study and no interventions are provided

This is the first rigorously evaluated study to provide evidence on the impact of interventions combining sanitary pad distribution and reproductive health education in schools, as compared to each intervention alone, on educational, social and health outcomes for girls.

You can check out our baseline report brief here which provides a description of a sample of the girls who will be participating in The Nia Project, indicating a clear need for our interventions.

Generously funded by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, The Nia Project is led by ZanaAfrica. The Population Council serves as ZanaAfrica's research partner that will evaluate the impact of ZanaAfrica's interventions.

The Impact

Evidence from The Nia Project will lay the foundation for future action and study on menstrual health management, and school-based reproductive health education. These results will represent a major step forward in the quality of evidence on approaches to improve the health, educational and social outcomes of adolescent girls in Kenya.

Community Engagement: The Partnership Program

We're creating sustainable change by empowering community-based organizations across Kenya to be agents of change in the lives of the girls in their community.

We work with 14 local community based partner organizations throughout Kenya, to equip 10,000 girls a year with sanitary pads, tie on cotton underwear, and reproductive health education to diminish missed school days due to menstruation.

Through our Partnership Program, we also provide community-strengthening trainings for our partner organizations three times a year so that they are equipped with the knowledge and information to create safe spaces for girls.

Our trainings offer guidance on menstrual health management and sexual and reproductive health and rights, while sharing best practices to implement child protection policies through a human rights lens.

Partnership Program Feedback:

" With the increased information our partners learn through our trainings and subsequently impart to girls, girls report increased knowledge about their bodies, their reproductive systems, and their human rights.

" Ninety-five percent of our program participants report feeling better able to manage their periods so they can stay in school, and also report feeling better able to say no to negative peer pressure.

" Information gleaned from our trainings helps to dispel misconceptions and myths related to menstruation.

" Our support has a multiplying effect as the information girls receive extends to their friends, siblings, relatives and even their parents.

" Our partners have a better understanding of what the girls they work with are experiencing and can then find solutions to support them.

This recent media clip from NPR highlights the work of our Partnership Program. In the photo you will see our Programs team leading a lesson to girls on how to use a sanitary pad.

Global Advocacy: Breaking Taboos

Through our global advocacy work we leverage data and experiences from our grassroots work to support local and international governments, policy makers, and other key stakeholders to support girls' education and retention through the provision of sanitary pads and comprehensive menstrual and reproductive health education.

We passionately believe that menstruation should be celebrated, not shamed, and are leveraging our thought leadership and activism to help create a world where adequate menstrual health management is recognized as a human right for all women and girls.

Our primary efforts include participating in the Kenyan Government's Technical Working Groups, and engaging UN agencies and other key stakeholders to prioritize menstrual health management and firmly entrench menstrual and reproductive health and rights into global funding priorities and development agendas.

Key Achievements

- o From 2010 through 2016, we have succeeded in supporting the Government of Kenya to be the first to write sanitary pads in the national education budget, as essential as other school items such as pencils.
- o In 2016 we supported menstrual equity advocates and activists in New York City and London to abolish the tampon tax.
- o In 2016, we participated in five Technical Working Groups to integrate Menstrual Health Management into a range of policies including Sexual and Reproductive Health and Rights.
- o In 2017, we supported the Kenyan Ministry of Health and other key partners in developing a policy and strategy document regarding the safety of contents and manufacturing of feminine hygiene products.

Menstrual Hygiene Day

We are one of the founding organizations of a global movement to raise awareness around menstrual hygiene management.

In 2014, our friends from WASH United started Menstrual Hygiene Day on May 28 to create "a world where women and girls can manage their menstruation hygienically, in privacy with safety and dignity."

From the inaugural MH Day to present, we work with key stakeholders and the media locally and internationally to support, organize and celebrate this day.
